Karizma gives him dap.

Karizma: No doubt. That's what I'm talking about! Blazin'!

The warriors gather around inside the old abandoned warehouse as they listen to Solar Flex speak.

Solar Flex: For the past few days, I have noticed signs of animosity that was displayed by some of you warriors. Yes I do agree that NATO gave us a raw deal. I would like for you to remember the time when the Katalambano and Omega 2000 went into battle together. Although there were some missions that we were totally against, there was still a desire to battle and defend our honor against this war on terrorism. If this is any consolation, as a whole the Dynamic Trio, Suju, and the entire world are proud of the Katalambano. This is the latest intel that was received from our scouts. Karkase is hiding out in Moscow and linking up with a Russian terrorist named Nicholi Tachenko, alias Anaconda. He served in Bosnia, Afghanistan, and Operation Iraqi Freedom before being court martialed for war crimes.

Desert Eagle begins to ponder about the terrorist Nicholi Tachenko alias Anaconda. He reminisces when he was doing a tour in Iraq during Operation Iraqi Freedom with the Special Forces. His unit was sent to pull security in Baghdad with a Ranger battalion out of Fort Bragg. During the security mission, there were six soldiers who were ambushed and later captured by the Iraqi terrorists. The Special Forces and the Rangers went out in two rescue teams to find the missing soldiers. Three days later, their bodies were found on the highway hanging from a bridge at the overpass. One of the leaders of the rescue teams was SSGT Nicholi Tachenko. He became furious when he saw the dead bodies of his soldiers hanging from the bridge. He notified his battalion about the remains of the six soldiers and requested to send out an assault team to apprehend those terrorists. His unit denied his request and ordered him to return to the camp. Desert Eagle received the message and told SSGT Tachenko that his request was denied. His reply was, "This is bullshit! This is an insult to every Ranger that spilled his guts and put his life on the line! Fuck this shit, I am leaving!" Then Desert Eagle stood in his path and replied, "Look man, I am pissed too and I also want to find those killers. But we have orders to return back to the camp. There will be another day to settle the score." The Ranger looked at Desert Eagle with anger and pushed him aside. Then he said, "Fuck Battalion, they always trying to defend the enemy and never protecting the welfare of a soldier! I am sick and tired of stupid shit! We have so many Rules of Engagement and all it does is confuse the hell out of a soldier! You can't even engage the enemy until somebody is shot or killed!" Desert Eagle looked at the Ranger and blocked his path again. The Ranger was pissed but he realized that Desert Eagle was only trying to follow his orders. He gave Desert Eagle one last comment. "Look, Des, I respect the fact that you are following orders. Don't take it personal, but we are going through and don't try to stop us. We are willing to suffer the consequences when we return to the camp. Are you down?" Desert Eagle looked at the two teams as they divided up and on the two opposing sides. His soul became vexed when he saw some of his soldiers leaving his command to follow the Ranger. SSGT Tachenko began to smile at Desert Eagle as the troops stood behind him. Suddenly it disappeared when a few of his troops turned back around and decided to stay with Desert Eagle. He looked at them and replied, "If we work together, we can return to the camp without any repercussions." Desert Eagle replied, "You fail to realize in that city their people that are prisoners in the own homes. Not to mention out on the streets there are innocent bystanders out there and we don't even know who killed our men. If you go out in the city on a rampage you will pay for the ramification of your sins.”

The Ranger heard enough and walked away with the rebels following him into the city. Surprisingly, the terrorist organization that initiated the attack was found, from being tipped off by two local nationals for one hundred dollars. SSGT Tachenko and his men went into the city of Baghdad and destroyed the killers and returned to the camp. Although Desert Eagle didn't agree with SSGT Tachenko's rampage, he still remained silent. Unfortunately, there were two kids killed in the crossfire during the attack and the two nationals were killed by more members of the terrorist organization. The two nationals' bodies were hung in effigy with a sign on their remains that was written in Arabic: “Betrayal has no honor.” Later that same day, American money was found in their house after being raided by the Iraqi police. Iraqi police and Iraqi soldiers reported the incident to the United States Army.

Later NATO ordered the United States Army to have an investigation. It was discovered that several soldiers from the Special Forces and the Ranger battalion were doing a patrol during that month. Desert Eagle and SSGT Tachenko were ordered to be questioned for an investigation. Although Desert Eagle was against the actions displayed by SSGT Tachenko, he still denied his men or any member of the Ranger battalion being involved with the killing spree. The next day, there was an investigation of their soldiers. During the investigation, none of Desert Eagle's people revealed the identity of any individual or action that was displayed. However, two of SSGT Tachenko's men admit-
